April

Focus: Medicine and Sports

A delegation from Chicago visited Chicago's Sister Cities, Shenyang and Shanghai. The delegation included healthcare professionals with expertise in public health, infection control, bioterrorism prevention, sports and exercise medicine safety, injury prevention, rehabilitation and triage.

The purpose of this visit was to collaborate with colleagues in China to develop sustainable and replicable educational programs designed to address the learning needs of local healthcare providers, civic leaders, and the business community to meet current needs and ensure a system-wide approach to safety and health for the Olympic Games. As co-collaborators, local expertise and resources of both communities were used.

Results:

- Participants established strategic partnerships with the Chinese Medical community leading to the creation of ongoing educational and interventional programs.
- Provided opportunities for Chicago's healthcare and community leaders to study China's comprehensive approach to epidemic control and surveillance.
- Created a collaborative relationship with the philanthropic community (Rotary clubs) in support of medical exchange programs.
- Increased potential for economic development between Chicago and China.
- Collaborated with nursing associations that provided consultations, workshops, and training to ensure appropriate utilization of local resources.
- Participants can now better allay patient/family anxiety and enhance favorable public perception of emergency interventions.
- Ensured core competencies in hazard surveillance and detection, including procedures for notifying public health and security officials, and methods for enhancing situational awareness and personal safety.
- Shared protocols for personal protection during mass casualty incidents, health threats and methods of treatment, and the role of the individual health care provider within the overall public health system.
- Identified the educational needs for local government officials and other community policymakers.
- Helped ensure that day-to-day systems of emergency care will be sustainable for the Olympic Games as well as for responding to routine community medical emergencies.

U.S.-China Sister Cities Conference was an incredible display of citizen and subnational diplomacy at its best as Chicago played host to nearly 200 delegates from China and the U.S. Business and municipal leaders, along with citizen diplomats, attended the conference. This monumental convening created a powerful reminder about the important role the sister cities global network plays in bringing together diverse cultures around one common goal: shared prosperity and a desire to create a better understanding of one another. The Conference also celebrated the 30th anniversaries of Chicago's sister city relationships with Shanghai and Shenyang and also kicked off a few new U.S.-China partnerships in the process.

October 24-31

An eight-member delegation of interdisciplinary social services professionals from Chicago visited Shanghai to learn about Shanghai's aging policies and programs. This second annual exchange follows a delegation from Shanghai visiting Chicago in 2014. The city of Shanghai has a population of over 24 million, and 2.7 million of its residents are aged 65 or older, equivalent to Chicago's entire population. Chicago is facing the challenge of planning and delivering services for aging Chicagoans, including the large tide of baby boomers growing older. Thus, Chicago and Shanghai have much to learn from each other about how to care for their aging populations.
